When selecting a key on the keyboard, the system checks whether this key is an actual key or a combination of several keys. If the system is unable to check whether the key is a combination of keys, it will check whether the key is a "Keylogger" key. In this case, the system checks whether the mouse is currently pointing on the main window of the program. A combination of keys to emulate a mouse click (that's why it is called a "Keylogger" key) appears when the mouse pointer is on the window. Some of the standard keys are included on the menu bar as well. Just some examples: Key.o - Pressing this key fires the keylogger button to start the capture process. Key.o - The active form in the active window fires a "Kilogger Button" to start the capture process. Key.o - The dialog box fired by the active form fires a "Kilogger" button to start the capture process. Key.o - The Modal form fired by the active form fires a "Kilogger" button to start the capture process. Key.o - The Application Window fires a "Kilogger" button to start the capture process.
