Finding the Tools You Need Before you dive into a Photoshop project, you need to find the tools that are most appropriate for that job. Figure 5-1 gives an example of tools you may use to achieve the end result of drawing a logo. FIGURE 5-1: It's easy to find the tools you need in Photoshop. In most cases, you can get by with just the tools that appear in the lower-left corner of the Image Canvas. For example, you may need to draw a circle, curve, or spline, so you can make use of the tools in the Tools panel. (For more on using the Tools panel, see the sections that follow.) You can drag a tool out from the panel to the canvas to access its options (usually, shown in Figure 5-1, rather than the default tool), or you can type the name of the command into the Search box of the main menu. Photoshop also supplies many tools that you may never use directly but which are useful for making adjustments to the image. These include tools that offer Zoom, Rotate, Brightness/Contrast, Levels, and Curves. Most of these tools require you to make a drawing to interact with them, so you may not actually use them. If you're not sure whether you need the tool or not, you may be better off leaving the tool in the Tools panel. This chapter provides general guidelines that are useful regardless of which tools you use. First, decide which tools you want to use and then look in the chapter for how to use the specific tools. You may also want to look at the help that comes with the program. Not only does Photoshop Help viewable on the View menu but the Help menu provides links to many manuals that come with the program, which are quite comprehensive. If you have an Internet connection, you can also check out the help at ` ## Setting Up the Photoshop Toolbar The following list shows the tools and keyboard shortcuts that appear in your Photoshop Toolbar when you start Photoshop. They can be accessed from the Photoshop Menu panel or from the Primary Toolbar

The next step for the Special Commission for the Fight against Organised Crime and Terrorism (CEPAO) is to prepare and implement the bill that will reform the administration of the CPP. Public officials said on Tuesday that the next step for the Special Commission for the Fight against Organised Crime and Terrorism (CEPAO) is to prepare and implement the bill that will reform the administration of the CPP. "We will present the bill of reforms that will allow the CPP to be reformed and the entire democratic world wants this reform, to address the institution of the President, the executive power and the function of the chief of staff," the source told the Dominican Republic News Agency (ARDI). The bill is designed to avoid future constitutional crises like the one that occurred during the 2016 presidential campaign. It is crucial to note that the process of reforming the constitution will require the signature of PPD-led president Danilo Medina. The source underscored that they did not want the president to sign the bill, but they should not have reservations about it. "The government has a democratic majority, it is legitimate and constitutional for the president to sign," said the source. "Although the opposition (PPD) did not achieve the majority, it has four extra ministers. In addition to that, several changes occurred since the last reform." The source informed that as a result of those changes, the reform could be done in a more efficient manner. "The next step is to begin a process that will bring together the Commission in order to analyze the changes that occurred between the last draft and the current one. Then, the CPP can be presented to the president," they added. The source clarified that the aforementioned reforms would not require the president's signature and that, once made, they will take effect in the beginning of 2019.
