A sequel to Gothic is finally on the way. This game will be one of the first games on PC with a completely new engine. The engine is currently being finalized and nothing is set in stone yet, but you can expect a lot of new features and polished graphics. The development is being led by a member of the original team, one of the leaders of the Gothic series. Features: New Engine The new engine is being developed from the ground up. By building a completely new engine, the team wants to offer a better experience for the players, while still keeping the classic look and feel of Gothic. Some questions such as: Which texture/model settings to use? What rendering mode to use? etc. are still being studied. The team will be working hard to provide as much feedback as possible. User-Friendly Interface Keep your workstation up to date with the new UI. Easily add games to your to-do list, read about updates and discuss ideas with other users! Steam Workshop Support Since Gothic 1 is almost 20 years old, the team wants to give it a complete overhaul. Alongside the new engine, they are working on the User Interface. One of their first big steps will be to include Steam Workshop support. This will allow the community to contribute custom model skins and textures. There will be opportunities for modders to tweak some of the graphics of the game. More Screenshots: A New Engine: This is a screenshot of the Gothic 1 engine. Notice the "E" which stands for Evolution. The next screenshot shows the final ingame engine. The UI will be tweaked before the game is released, but this is the final ingame engine. New Features: All the old features are still planned for the game. The team will focus on keeping the good things as well as improving upon what's broken. One of the big focuses is the interface. The UI will be expanded and changed to be user-friendly. The team plans to release a new UI as part of a future update. Webpage: Keep up to date with the development process by following our progress on our new webpage: Hi Folks, My name's Adam, I am one of the lead programmers. I am currently working on the Engine while Jeff (the designer) and the rest of the team work on the
