Bob is a curious dog who, like every dog, has an itch to investigate. It's an easy game for kids, but you can challenge yourself to see how far you can go. Find out what happens if you step on a magic circle. Find out what happens when you fall off a roof. Where will Bob lead you next? Enjoy your adventures with Bob! Tell your friends or share with them to play too! I recently took a degree in Veterinary Science. I've always wanted to make games, and I finally got my chance. I'm going to be making indie games over the next few years. I'll put some up on the website when they're finished. I've made a few games already, but I haven't really been active for a while. I've been sick, but I'll get back to it. Tips for making a more beautiful game -1) Make things slower. Keep your games between 1 and 2 minutes. Cut out loads of features and polish the game more. People get bored when things go by too quickly. -2) Make it less on-rails. Let the player make their own choices as long as they don't break the game -3) Add to the puzzle and do what you can not to force people through the game. A lot of games do this, forcing you to finish the game in a certain time frame. The actual number of hours put in will be way less. -4) Make your game hard, but not so hard that it is unplayable. This will attract players who wouldn't otherwise play your game, but the difficulty will also make it shorter -5) Don't make the game 'just for kids'. You're probably not going to make a lot of money off it, so no one will judge you, but at least you won't alienate the people who would actually like your game. I made this game because I wanted a change of pace, but I also wanted to get feedback. The Basics It's a game in the style of "Bob's Big Adventure" or "Banjo-Kazooie". You run around collecting the stars. You can do this by running over them or collecting them, by grabbing them, or throwing them (or later, throwing just using either the

This one is meant for a group experience, and all players should cooperate to complete it. This game depends heavily on group effort. The story can't progress if any one of the player group doesn't do his job. To ease things up, I've added role-playing, bonus end, and limited-use items. For example, when 3 of 4 player completes the required part to complete bonus end, it will trigger for a 3/4 role-playing. I made role-playing game end different for every group. This gives players the freedom to role-play and enjoy the different role-playing sequences. Note: Players who don't choose a class, will be given the limited-use item at the end. If the limited-use item is used 3 times, it will be exhausted, so the player will need to wait for a new one. Mini-game Mirror Maze:Each player controls the life and death of a character at his own time, but players can only control one character. Characters who are under your control will avoid the traps in your way. When there's one, you will be promoted to a level 3 and will have more control over that character. If you run into one of the monsters in Mirror Maze, they will kill you, so you have to avoid them carefully. Note: it is possible to run out of energy to promote into level 3, or cannot see the monster you are supposed to avoid. Don't worry, it is just an AI glitch. Hidden Face Mirror Maze:When 3 out of 4 players are defeated, a monster will appear to capture and kill you. Don't worry about them, they won't touch you. Instead, they will enter a maze and will lead you to your goal. So how to run away from them? Simply put, stay in the maze for 30 seconds, the fight will be over. You can play against human or AI players, the condition is when you are defeated, you are still alive.-----CASPER'S ULTIMATE JOURNEY:Choose your class now: I made this game for my wife. I'm currently working on another game, which should be out by Christmas, if I don't burn myself out. For the meantime, this game is what I can do. Have fun. The Beginning : Bordiga choose his class: Bordiga class is a traditional one. Clergy, Trained etc.. This is based on

What's new in Chair F*cking Simulator:

2 was recently released. It's a big game that has touched the robot rescue subgenre to help veterans of the subgenre. It all starts when Leon's brother goes missing, and he and his friends have to use the Robotic Programming database to find a way to rescue him. At the same time, they begin to see how the RP database is being used by the government on them, and that leads to a confrontation with the Secret Service. Meanwhile, the Titans storm the lab and rage on a furious path. The game uses a battle system that works quite well. In the game, you're given the ability to give commands to the robot, and you have to do everything yourself on occasion. You can change the robots' direction using the commands at any time, and the combat is simultaneously funny and serious. You'll run into enemies who will try to attack you, but you can choose not to fight and continue through the jungle at the risk of your enemies destroying your robot. You can also get into trouble with items sometimes in the game, and you have to learn how to control your robot without getting into trouble and having the robot get destroyed. You have to not only save the robot, but also yourself! Robot Rescue Revolution 2 is a major visual novel, available on one of the biggest game distribution systems right now. The game features many aspects to highlight, such as confusing plot, many character interactions and some fairly surprising endings as well. I played this game throughout the summer. Let's take a look at what it has to offer! Robot Rescue Revolution 2: Fujiko Mine Story Overview The story opens when Leon's brother goes missing, and he and the girls are told by the town's doctor that he'll probably die if they don't do something. There's one option out of nowhere: Leon gets called into the Narrow Line Forest, where the town's sick robots must be sent to a lab for repair. On the journey, Leon and the girls are pulled into a world of Mad Robots, where a mad robot named Ibanez is after them. While he works on his "broken" robots, Leon is pressed with the unexpected arrival of King Aurum, a robot firefighter and Captain of the Rescue Thunder Corps. Unfortunately for them, they're not up to par. Queen Wanda, the Robo Rescue navigator
