UNIpch is a free application designed to help you remotely manage your Windows PC remotely. Its main purpose is to let you run commands (batch files, PowerShell scripts) on your Windows PC from another computer or other device using a web browser. You can also remotely access your Windows PC using a number of methods: - A web browser from another computer (either from the local area network or from the internet). - Any device with an IP address, even an unsupported device. In addition, you can use any Linux application to connect to your PC by typing in a command (e.g. VNC) and a port number (e.g. 4160), the same way you can use any Windows application to connect to your PC. Moreover, UNIpch can help you remotely troubleshoot your Windows PCs. This way, you can check the status of your device and log files remotely, without having physical access to the device. Advanced log file viewer UNIpch is the only tool that allows you to remotely access and view Windows Event Logs and Console Logs on your Windows PC and let you take a look at what's going on. This works by opening the log files using an advanced event viewer. Collect screenshots of what's going on your PC Using UNIpch, you can capture screenshots of whatever is on the screen of your PC and make them available to you and your team remotely. UNIpch Features - Use Windows Task Manager UNIpch makes it possible to show you all the running processes on your PC. - Enable/Disable Tasks You can enable or disable running applications and tasks and install new ones from the UNIpch. You can also kill a certain process. - Take screenshots You can take screenshots using an Advanced screen capture utility or via the command line. - Set power settings You can enable/disable sleep mode, hibernate or shutdown the computer, according to the power settings. - Open Registry Editor You can access the windows registry, delete, edit, add or delete keys, values or folders, enable/disable processes or apps and more. - Run commands UNIpch is a very useful tool to remotely run any command on your Windows PC, such as system restore, backup, delete a file, run a scheduled task, etc. - Advanced disk manager You can check the status of all the hard drives

What's New In Cryptnos?

Cryptnos is a small, but efficient application that enables you to generate pseudo-random passwords for network connections, email accounts, social networks and anything else you are commonly using. Outdated, yet intuitive interface The interface – as well as the entire application – does not come with complex or advanced features, so it can be handled with ease even by less-experienced users. The interface consists of a small window with a rudimentary, plain and minimalistic layout. Even though it is not stylish or modern, the UI displays all the available settings. To be more precise, you can type in the name of the site or service, include a common passphrase you associate with it and allow the app to generate your password. Enables you to set rules for generating passkeys While the program renders passwords automatically, you should know that you do have a word to say regarding the type of encryption it creates. More exactly, you can select the hash algorithm and specify the number of times it can repeat this loop. In addition, the program enables you to create a passcard that contains only numbers, letters, alphanumerics or all of them. Lastly, you can apply a length restriction for the password, a feature that can surely come in handy in numerous situations. It is necessary to mention that the utility enables you to use the same parameters for generating passwords for other services. Moreover, you can lock the parameters and use the same type of encryption for all your passwords. This option can come in handy when creating multiple accounts for your team or your employees, for instance. A simple tool that gets the job done fast Summary: Cryptnos is a small, but efficient application that enables you to generate pseudo-random passwords for network connections, email accounts, social networks and anything else you are commonly using.
