Gov. Spencer Cox is trailing the businessman with potential Utah voters. The poll, released Tuesday by Utahns for Trump, shows Trump leading Romney 44 percent to 16 percent among Republicans surveyed. Trump leads among all three of Utah’s stakeholder groups polled: Republican voters, Mormons and former Mormons, and older Republicans. Among potential Republican voters, “Trump drew support from 62 percent of the name-only group, 42 percent of Hispanic/Latino voters, 61 percent of Mormons, and 78 percent of those who were once members of the LDS Church,” according to a press release from Utahns for Trump. Romney, who has dropped considerably since Utah GOP leaders suspended his candidacy in January, registered only 10 percent among Republicans. Cox, Utah’s former governor, is polling strongly among Utah Republicans, drawing 21 percent, while George Pyle, Trump’s former campaign director, sits at 4 percent. Among all potential Utah voters, Cox leads with 21 percent, while Pyle trails at 4 percent and Trump is at 3 percent. The poll was conducted by Public Opinion Strategies, in collaboration with the Hinckley Institute of Politics and the Atlantic Media/Ashland Global Leadership Summit. It sampled 800 potential Utah Republican primary voters in all four of Utah’s congressional districts and the likely result from the 2016 presidential election. “The race among Utah Republicans for the party’s nomination has tightened in the last few weeks, with Trump in the lead,” said Jon Ralston, the publisher of the Ralston Reports, who conducts the project. “Trump is grabbing support from other Republican contenders, including Romney and Sen. Ted Cruz of Texas.” According to Ralston, the poll results illustrate that Utahns for Trump are “not an anti-Romney group, but they don’t intend to vote for Romney or another candidate.” “The poll will continue to be updated with new results,
