That it is really hard for them to get back all of their precious data. The E.U. is launching a new probe into whether French energy giant Total engaged in corruption in the business of developing West Africa's offshore oil resources. The E.U.'s Court of Justice will start the investigation in June, according to two sources familiar with the matter. Under a controversial, multi-billion dollar, 10-year petroleum development plan, the French oil giant helped the weak and corrupt Benin government set up a fund that was used to pay bribes and other funds to officials. Investors in the deal include Chinese and French firms. The probe could have national and international implications. The government of Noynoy Aquino, the current president of Benin, has not been implicated and has said the contracts were legally compliant. The Benin Oil Ministry did not respond to an email seeking comment. A spokesman for Total said the company was "strictly attentive to the good governance requirements of any business undertaken by it." The company signed deals with Benin's state-owned oil company, Société Nationale d'Énergie Génératrice (Soneag), in 2011 to develop offshore resources off the Atlantic coast of the West African country. According to a 2010 investigation by the International Consortium of Investigative Journalists, based in Washington and Mexico City, Total agreed to have the Benin government set up a special account to be used to pay for patronage and other bribes. Parties connected to the Benin government -- including two of its ministers -- have been accused of establishing the account, paying their own way in the scheme and then funneling the money to a front company that would be controlled by Total. The deals involved ten oil fields. They were designed to share the revenues from the oil production in equal parts, with another company, Sociedad de Hidrocarburos de Occidente (Shoc), taking a third. Total held a 70 percent stake in the company.
