The Dungeon, mid-level 2 The story begins in the lush, warm world known as Calavendor. In the small community of Kusari, on the southern coast of the lush, warm island, young practitioners will begin to study their chosen art. Here, each year thousands of young, determined students receive a chance to achieve their dreams by passing on knowledge to their peers and succeed in their quest to become the best in their class. However, all is not well in the village. Jealousy, greed, and disobedience is all around. The previous year, in a shocking matter, the top two student of their class died in an instant, the community is angered, and no one can agree why. Dont´s Die Dateless, Dummy! is a Japanese visual novel created by mir_Fist. Unlike your typical Visual Novel (which is what this game is), rather than being told from one person's point-of-view, it has a panel-by-panel turn-based system: The player is given a series of decisions to make. Each choice will lead to a scene of a different character talking about a topic, and then the player's turn to choose what to say in that conversation. The people the player talks to will then make choices in their turn; these will reveal more of the story to the player. As the player progresses through the game, they will unlock different erotic content, including CGs of the characters having sex with one another. Upon completing the game, the player will be given the choice to have the girl they saved in the final chapter give them either an Anti-Venereal Charm, or else nothing at all. Whichever the player chooses will have a different effect on the game's ending. Coming soon for PC Windows! This website is not affiliated with or authorized by the J.D. What's new:

Antitank gun or a rifle? Both at different times. Anti aircraft or anti ground vehicle? Either. Offensive or defensive? Offensive!!! Evened up. i have 7210 tank destroyers. 71 ao has been a bit of a problem lately so i aim to bring up the tanks with 10-12 500mapths and 88 ao, but might not be enough. my alligator workigncrew dont have that capability (will let alligator crew compete in the event :P)my pitbull crew do though so i will probably think of bringing them if i have 20 mutts around :D p.s. i will require a repair turret :D As far as anti-air i wouldnt worry about it. we have 1.5k anti-air and we have had muts that have taken out 5ks or so if we are really unlucky (no joke, that is what happened to a former char) Now if you wanted to do a real good job you could do 13r uca, re-standard and hope for some crit's to make the damage worth it. If you wanted to be real serious, get 14r uca and get some 3crit barrels. I also think tho, it would make alot of people look at shooting muts a little differently Good luck! slower you're right, the charge time is definatly fast! the 150mm gun itself could be upgraded if multiple Turrets were found, but what those turrets would be is up in the air (no pun intended). we used to have a crew that was fully trained with the 14r with a custom sub-turret (personally, I was just happy to even be in operations and it was meant to be fired only in a tournament). I would definitely do 85mm + 85mm just because of the penetrating power and the ability to get through a lot of armor. But if I had to go with something I always had and still have in the back of mind was 119mm haha. The mass I get with that much ammo is unbelievable. Kfire: That wok's bs...to quote a quote: "No poster here works to change" Your post just added another sad poster to your list. Varoni: But you seen "War in space" with Gene Cernan? Didn't it say on Space

It's time to go skiing. Start by creating a jump Ski jumping is the sport of jumping off a hill into an air conditioned, 80-foot-deep pit filled with white water. The jumping, on the part of the jumper, falls well beneath the water. The skier, who starts out prone, moves the foot that hits the water farthest to the right, kicks up to gain speed, jumps and in a fraction of a second, the water impact and the recoil of his own body stop him in mid-flight. The head of the jumper is usually protected from the water by an airfoil-shaped helmet, called a helmet. This reduces the force of impact and it may reduce the chance of injury. This increased safety is the main reason for the safety equipment. Furthermore, the water depth of 80 feet is usually enough to reduce the force of impact to safety standards but still gives the jumper all the speed and momentum that his body needs to complete the jump. The skier is assisted by the jumpers who prepare the hill and take part in the race. This group is known as the gatekeepers, because they open and close the gate, through which the skier must jump. As the name implies, it is the fastest way to go down a hill. It usually consists of jumping onto the steep slopes of a natural or artificial slope. The beginning of the slope consists of the high portion of the slope where the fall velocity is minimal or almost nonexistent, but the free-fall velocity is maximal, and the part of the slope which is lower than the high portion of the slope is known as the high part. On a straight downhill, the free-fall velocity is maximal. The only way to avoid injuries in the downhill is through the protective padding on the hip, shoulder, knees, or ankles. It consists of jumping off a big hill, skidding down the hill's steep face, with the body stretched out and with arms and legs bent. The usual technique of jumping is a first leg kick to create a stable base and a second leg kick to gain speed. The head of the jumper is usually protected from the water by an airfoil-shaped helmet, called a helmet. This reduces the force of impact and it may reduce the chance of injury. This increased safety is the main reason for the safety equipment. Furthermore, the water depth of 80 feet is usually enough to reduce the force of impact to safety standards but still gives the jumper all the speed and momentum that his
