Radio-frequency magnetic resonance elastography of lumbar discs in patients with adult degenerative spondylolisthesis. The purpose of this study was to evaluate lumbar discs in patients with adult degenerative spondylolisthesis using radio-frequency magnetic resonance elastography (rfMRE). rfMRE was performed in 21 symptomatic patients and 24 control subjects who underwent rfMRE in the L4-5 and L5-S1 intervertebral discs. Disc elastography measurements, which represent the stiffness of the disc, were obtained by a single observer, using the same rfMRE data, from each intervertebral disc on a single magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) slice. The values for the average stiffness of each disc were recorded. Both the L4-5 and L5-S1 intervertebral discs in patients with adult degenerative spondylolisthesis were significantly harder than those of the control group (P Acute Pernicious Anemia: A Case Report and Literature Review.
