You could also consider a wireless bridge, a device that can bridge the Sagemcom Fast 3284 radio frequency into a wired connection. For example, if your room is cluttered, what could be a better solution than to get an Xtreamer Wi-Fi DC-XA200M Wireless Media Bridge from Xtreamer ? This device uses a wired connection to connect to your Sagemcom Fast 3284. In the end, the network data is still transported through the "wired" connection, only the connection point has changed from the wireless antenna to your Sagemcom Fast 3284. If you have a few computers, you can use an Ethernet switch to connect them to the Sagemcom Fast 3284. This gives you the ability to avoid having to plug each computer into your Sagemcom Fast 3284. This is more or less the same function as an Xtreamer Wireless Media Bridge.

Remember to remember the password, of course! Do this by writing it on a sticky or password protected page and sticking it to your Sagemcom Fast 3284. But the best way to keep a secure password is to create a brute force password policy. For example, here is the sample Sagemcom F@st 3304 V2 Maroc Telecom password policy, using a brute force tool and a table of all the possible passwords. This means that even if you break the radio frequency password, you will still need to brute force the password on the computer.

With only a couple of Sagemcom F@st 3304 V2 Maroc Telecoms being available and sold, most individuals can work with a list of possible password and not need to go through all possible passwords. But in case you must, here is a list of pw_list_table.txt. Password are in English and are in alphabetical order, from a to z and A to Z. Below is an example of a password table and a brute force program output. 5ec8ef588b
